The Cerulean Offers a No-Passport Caribbean Villa Week on St. Croix for About $86 a Person a Night

Saint Croix, Virgin Islands (US) Nov 27, 2026 (Issuewire.com) - The Cerulean, a five-bedroom oceanfront villa on the East End of St. Croix in the U.S. Virgin Islands, has opened its December calendar with nights from $800. Because St. Croix is U.S. territory, a U.S. citizen flies there on a domestic ticket and needs no passport. A group of twelve that books five December nights pays $5,185.41 in total, taxes and fees included, which works out to about $86 a person a night.

The Caribbean has a reputation for villas that cost thousands of dollars a night. The Cerulean's December prices tell a different story. The villa's live booking calendar, read on Nov. 27, 2026, shows every night from Dec. 2 through Dec. 17 open, at $800 a night for most of those nights and up to $816 for a few. The minimum stay is five nights.

A five-night stay from Dec. 2 to Dec. 7 comes to $5,185.41 at checkout: $4,000 for the nights, a $475 cleaning fee, a $151.03 card fee and $559.38 in hotel tax. A seven-night week from Dec. 2 to Dec. 9 comes to $7,039.41 with the same fees and taxes. The villa sleeps twelve, so a full house splits the five-night total to about $86 a person a night, and the seven-night week to about $84.

That price buys a whole house, not a hotel room. The Cerulean has five bedrooms, each with its own bathroom, spread across a main house and a separate guest cottage about twenty paces away. The cottage has its own kitchen, living room and a spiral stair up to a loft bed, and it comes with every booking. Every room is air-conditioned.

Outside, a pool sits above the sea, next to an outdoor kitchen, a grill and a fire pit. A long stepped path runs down the slope to the villa's own beach on shallow water protected by a reef, where guests snorkel right off the shore. Guests describe the entry as rocky, so water shoes help.
