Presently, venture-backed and start-up companies are often following the path of rewarding their employees or retaining talents on board by offering stock options alongside remuneration. This might prove beneficial and attractive but as in today's times, when the failure rate of start-ups is high, many people are uncertain of whether to tie up huge finances to their stocks or let them expire without seeking any opportunity for financial gain. Associated taxes, like Alternate Minimum Tax (AMT) also make this decision much harder. With ESO Fund by your side, you can effectively and conveniently address this issue by exercising the options without taking the risk of putting their hard-earned money in that.

Apart from helping the employees with the financial aid, Employee Stock Options (ESO) Fund also helps company management take an appropriate and strategic decision when they are confused about which options are better from qualified stock options, non-qualified stock options (NSO), and restricted stock options (RSO). The professionals here address individual conditions noticeably and that makes it a lot less expensive for the company management than having the leaving employees capture equity without putting in any investment.

There can be a situation when a person has vested in stock but the IPO gets delayed, or a job comes along that is too good to ignore, but you can't put your money to exercise the options. During such options letting go of the stock to expire or tying up cash for years in it may not be the ideal position for you. ESO Fund is what comes to your aid in helping you make the most of the options. ESO Fund also helps to cover the large tax bill (such as AMT). And with ESO Fund you don't have to worry from the company's side as unless there is an IPO or sale, there are no payments due. So, when you have a question like expiring stock options what to do, ESO Fund is there to help you financially and strategically.
