

Where do most Glasses or Sunglasses come from?

Approximately 90% of all glasses frames in America are manufactured in Zhantai Wenzhou China

Wenzhou, Dec 21, 2018 (Issuewire.com) - As time goes by, our quality of life and living standards, in general, continue to improve, and consumers are getting more and more concerned about the health and protection of their eyes when choosing a pair of glasses. So most people generally go directly to the bigger brands, in hopes of getting the higher quality they promise and sell – not just in terms of functionality, but also paying more attention to their looks.

Well, that isn't necessarily bad as long as you are fully informed of what you are getting, considering those hefty price tags. Big brands tend to label themselves as having their own manufacturers to maintain their market image untouched. And they do! They do end up owning those manufacturers and factories, until they themselves become completely dependent on them.

What most people actually don't know is that a really big part of all the glasses in the World are made in Wenzhou, China. In fact, it's estimated that around 70% of all glasses (if not more) are produced in China and that most of the sunglasses from the popular international brands ultimately come from Wenzhou factories in Zhejiang Province – making China “just” the sunglasses manufacturing centre of the whole wide World!
