Toronto, Jan 20, 2019 (Issuewire.com) - The more the music is relatable, the more we love it is a fact that stands true for everyone. 'Karate Kid' is the newest drop in the block that has sent the hip-hop cult into frenzy. The passionate backing vocals of Lil Geno and the honest production by Incognito Beatz is your therapy for those bleak Monday blues. From technical appropriations to the flow in Lil Geno's rap skills, it all comes to down to one thing: an insane track enough to let your hair down.

Incognito Beatz, all of 19, hails from the neighborhoods of Toronto and has always had a knack for creating his own melodies. Later in his career, he evolved his mixed genres into horror-core tunes clubbed with trap drums. Lil Geno, on the other hand, skillfully tells his stories through fluent rap verses. 'Karate Kid' is the best of both worlds that is currently on its way to find a place on top of the contemporary music charts. Both new to the industry-based music scene, their production do not lack the fundamentals of experience or creative prosperity whatsoever. In fact, the potential that 'Karate Kid' has shown is making the audience take notice of their work. A groovy mix of rolling BGM and catchy modern poetry has made 'Karate Kid' stand out on its own. Music, irrespective of its genre has its own therapeutic properties. 'Karate Kid' gives you the vibe of an energy that we crave in our monotonous lives every day.

If you are just chilling with friends or having a time of your own, this track makes every occasion a blast. Lil Geno and Incognito Beatz have put in all their hard work in this creative trance that attracts the audience just within the first few seconds into the song. There is a contagious energy that makes you fall into a loop with 'Karate Kid'. It is incredible to think how far hip-hop has come. 'Karate Kid' lives through the influence of the good old Tupac or Eminem crunch and has modernized collective hip-hop with a whole new perspective. Listen to their tune right now on YouTube and enjoy hip-hop's mad charisma like never before!
