

Artist LIVE MULA's Natural Connection with Hip Hop is Expressed Through 'FUCK EM BOTH'

The level of creativity shown by LIVE MULA in his new composition 'FUCK EM BOTH' is unparalleled to any other creation. The intense lyricism of the track stands out.

New York, Dec 31, 1969 (Issuewire.com) - The artist LIVE MULA who is known as Cecilio Devon Joseph to his close friends and family has a passion for music since childhood. Taking something old and making it new, LIVE MULA is on the journey to present his audience a mixture of booming rap and blues with a twist of his own. Having a hip-hop base he takes the famous artist Jay-Z as one of his influences. Growing up in a family where music was an everyday custom, he couldn't wait to bring something of his own All of this contributed to his present composition 'FUCK EM BOTH'. This Brooklyn hip hop singer LIVE MULA is confident that he is going to make it with his hard work.

The track 'FUCK EM BOTH' has a mighty bass line that paves way for the lyricism from the beginning to the end. The gorgeous soundscape has an uplifting melodic line that keeps the listeners fascinated. The general flow of notes immediately leaves a mark on you and you are tempted into playing this track time and again. It is mostly LIVE MULA voice that stands out the most. The music is kept soothing so that his voice could be heard loud and clear. The artist also took the help of Tory Lanez and Q Diss while producing this track.

Some of the tracks that LIVE MULA is known for are 'G - Ride (one time)', 'MISFIT', 'PATEK', 'Jump (Freestyle) and 'NO TRUST'. As the names suggest most of LIVE MULA's just like 'FUCK
