A Family Nurse Practitioner is a registered nurse with specialized educational and clinical training in family practice. Nurse practitioners have a higher degree of training, in both the classroom and clinical setting, than Registered Nurses do, although becoming an RN is a prerequisite. Family Nurse Practitioners, in particular, are trained to work with both children and adults, most often in the context of a family practice or clinical setting. FNP's work with patients on maintaining health and wellness over the long term with a particular focus on preventative care. Many FNP's also choose to work in underserved populations and communities. An FNP may work under the direct supervision of a physician. More and more states, however, are allowing FNP's to work independently due to an extreme lack of doctors, particularly in the area of family practice.
