Grant Huffman is creating the best flavors of alternative hip-hop glory into an amalgamation of beautiful lyrical and tonal interpretation with 'Scent of A Demon'.

New Hudson, Dec 31, 1969 (Issuewire.com) - Music is attaining the most meaningful and insightful stage of freedom of speech in art. More and more artists are surfacing across genres and addressing unconventional social norms and personal dilemmas through the liberal platform of music. Detroit hip-hop artist Grant Huffman, member of the duo College Street Kids is making poetry as a tribute to the global dilemma of mass rectification. His new song 'Scent of A Demon' is a tribute to addiction and its effects on mental health. Working along the captivating lines of contemporary poetic freestyling and a beautiful tune, this song is rapidly finding critical and commercial success across various hip-hop music charts.

Grant Huffman is based out of Detroit, Michigan who interprets hip-hop with a new musical angle. He puts together his emotional and insightful intellect into a constructive playlist of dynamically sorted tracks. Some of his other songs like 'Simple Man', 'Comin Atchu' and 'So Gone Challenge' are examples of his musical comprehensions turned into expressive artworks. With time and experience, he is only becoming a more refined version of himself. His concepts on sound mixes along with its compatibility with enriching lyrical grandeur comes together into a beautifully organized distortion that makes the audience go into a loop with his songs.

An artist's true flair lies in his ability to pick the right emotional strings of expressions that are relatable in terms of audience acceptance. Grant Huffman speaks his inner mind and turbulence of his growing-up years into a soulful blend of hip-hop glazed tracks. Working solo and in a duo, his accomplishment deserves every kind of commendable appreciation on a global standard. As he continues to grow and expand his horizon of musically enriched wisdom, his popularity gradient is only going to grow enormous.
