

Legal Tech Innovator FairClaims Honored by the National Law Journal

FairClaims Recognized by the NLJ In First Ever “2019 Emerging Legal Technologies” Awards

Los Angeles East, Feb 21, 2019 (IssueWire.com) - FairClaims, a direct-to-consumer online dispute resolution platform based in Downtown Los Angeles, was honored by the National Law Journal in its first ever “2019 Emerging Legal Technologies” publication. One of only 44 legal tech companies to be recognized, it was released earlier this week and can be found here - https://images.law.com/media/nationallawjournal/supplements/NLJ_ET_2019/mobile/index.html#p=11.

John “JohnnyBot” Boese, also known in startup circles as “Product Genius Johnny”, had this to say: “our goal is to make FairClaims so good that we turn ordinary citizens into Super Lawyers.” Boese and team developed an auto insurance bodily injury tool that empowers consumers to learn all they need to know about their less severe, lower dollar amount auto accident insurance claim to negotiate and even mediate with the insurance company directly, thereby saving the 30-40% contingency fee they would need to split with their attorney and up to a year or more of time. This is in addition to a full-fledged dispute resolution platform that helps anyone anywhere resolve any kind of dispute under $25,000. Complete with intake, negotiation, mediation, and digital, remote arbitration.

“I am very proud of the team and quite honored to receive this award,” said Founder and CEO Stephen Kane. “Ed Smith from our team is known as the ‘resident trophy hunter’ and has won this and other awards, which we’ll be announcing shortly.” More than anything Kane is excited about democratizing access to justice - “when 86% of civil legal problems don’t get the help and expertise they deserve, and when all those people are disenfranchised from the system, it warms my heart to see progress and recognition on this front.” [see <https://www.lsc.gov/sites/default/files/images/TheJusticeGap-FullReport.pdf>]

FairClaims is a consumer friendly online dispute resolution platform that works with organizations like the Better Business Bureau, HomeAdvisor, Turo, and HomeAway to make it 10x easier, quicker, cheaper to resolve claims online.
