

Progressive Trance has Never Sounded So Refined Before Dead Ducks Dropped their Single ‘Penthos’

The innate trails of trance, tech and progressive house have found yet another nurturer with Dead Ducks and their new upbeat and groovy release called ‘Penthos’.

London, Dec 31, 1969 (Issuewire.com) - Trance and progressive house mixes have come a long way since its first inception. With the sound of the future compelling the audience to shake a leg on the dance floor, there is no definite definition of what rules a musician can follow and abide by. The newest proprietors of dance-floor themes under the spectrum of house and trance music, Dead

Ducks are conceptualizing these verses of known musical territories and incorporating their own style and sketches to give it a new name. Their new song 'Penthos' is an upbeat and boisterous blend of the best modern flavors of the undulating soundscape.

The biases of music, in general, may be subjective but under critical scrutiny, 'Penthos' is a lot more than what it projects. From the edgy beats to a consecutive portrayal of intrinsic musical flavors, it has it all. Dead Ducks are men of small wonders, producing and mixing tracks right out of their laptops. Making music through Landr, they have captured the right essence of what the audience wants in a song. After extensive theoretic and practical implementation of sorts, they have made a line of pumped up tracks like 'What You Make Out' and 'Liam Eats A Burger (And Vapes)' among others.

Having drawn inspiration from the likes of Above and beyond, Ilan Bluestone, Genix, Andrew Bayer and more, they have constructed their own style of musical norms. With 'Penthos', Dead Ducks have created a celebration for the mass, something that everyone can listen and cherish.
