

Reall Rapp's New Track 'I Need To Go' is an Incredible Rendition of Meaningful Sound and Lyrics

Reall Rapp is making powerful interpretations of soulful hip-hop melodies and social awareness of communal disparity with his newly released track 'I Need To Go'.

Philadelphia, Dec 31, 1969 (Issuewire.com) - Hip-hop's spectrum as one of the most mellifluous expressions in the artistic circle of outspokenness has been a matter of factual significance in the course of global humanity. Hip-hop has voiced its subjective opinions on matters, especially community sabotage for years, and now, this collective effort of thousands of musicians has emerged victorious as a distinct genre with a bigger purpose. Pennsylvania independent artist, Reall Rapp is encompassing this very historic stance of hip-hop and creating some of the most relevant songs as a tribute to his community. His newly dropped single 'I Need To Go' is an impactful venture about social and personal issues in the enormity of life and judiciary. A song of utmost importance in the current state of affairs that the world is perceiving and experiencing, Reall Rapp is the savior and propagator of artistic virtues who is here to cleanse our souls.

Reall Rapp's story as a musician goes back to when he was just a 13-year-old kid fascinated by the ways of the world. There has been no looking back since and he has trespassed every territory of hip-hop's regional modules. With his own band, he has imbibed the valuable riot of hip-hop as a genre and gradually constructed his own style. Working along the lines of spontaneous freestyles and a terrific beat and lateral sound creation of an ambient effect, 'I Need To Go' is an important song that needs to be heard as an important structural change in the contemporary biases of the world.

Reall Rapp's other song 'Fuck Em' is an explicit and opinionated verse of catchy sound intercepts and free-flowing lyrical variations. He is already receiving accolades of accomplishment from critics and audience and with time he is only going to get more insightful and versatile with his overall style arrangements.
