“Considering the significance of containers in speeding up application delivery, we decided to add Containerization to our consulting services portfolio, which will take us closer to our wide-spread customer base in the US technology market,” the company said in its official release.

Frequency and speed of application delivery matter a lot in the current market scenario, where DevOps and Cloud services are driving the majority of key IT business processes.

And, the effective utilization of server efficiencies and resources stand at the core of business continuity to tackle IT downtime issues.

In this journey of application-centric business transformation, firms are looking for environments that enable them to run apps smoothly, securely and at a faster rate than before.

That’s where containerization technology arrived as a means to safe and seamless application delivery!
