Beverly Hills, Oct 29, 2019 (IssueWire.com) - Yuri Rutman, who recently co-starred on NBC's "Chicago PD", has launched his independent short film, "Trained" on Amazon Prime Video.

Written, Directed, & Starring Yuri Rutman, the film is about a woman who suffers from Siderodromophilia. She cannot get be in a normal intimate relationship unless she is on or around moving trains in Chicago.

The film has elements of Alejandro Innaritu, Christopher Nolan, Lars Von Trier, And Terrence Malick.

"Trained" dives deep into subjects such as psychology, mental illness, sexuality, gender roles, and spirituality.

"With today's society being all about quick fixes and easy way outs in life and relationships, "Trained" shows what long-lasting unconditional love is all about", adds Rutman. "Plus it gives an insider look into a condition that has never been shown in movies, television, books, or other media".

"Trained" originally launched on the Shorts.TV cable channel globally and now has found a second home on Amazon Prime Video.

The film was produced by Rutman and Scott Drucker, who is best known for directing "Who Is Arthur Chu?"

Rutman and Drucker are long-time collaborators and they filmed "Trained" in Chicago over a 48 hour period in Chicago.

"No one believes we made this film in two days", states Rutman. "Especially with all the love scenes intertwined with the Chicago cityscape".

Apart from numerous reviews of the film, and interviews with Rutman in English speaking and Russian speaking media, "Trained" is getting a lot of buzzes online as one of the best short films ever made.
