Houston, Jan 17, 2020 (Issuewire.com) - Version 3.0 is a major enhancement enabling stronger Safety Cultures in Critical Infrastructure sectors. One example; the oil and gas industry is undergoing a “desired” transformation to a Culture of Safety as well as High Reliability Management. This implies that over 3,500 companies will need to transform their cultures. This also suggests that the upstream sector will have 3,500 Cultures of Safety, not the singular that is often touted.

The Rapid Response Institute, <https://therrinstitute.com/> is pleased to announce that its Version 3.0 released today incorporates a new Diverse Team Module dramatically increasing internal human interactions during the game.

This new release incorporates experiences and customer feedback and is a major enhancement not just to this game, but the way online learning performs <https://therrinstitute.com/lets-play-a-game/>.

According to Dr. Scott Shemwell, The Rapid Response Institute., Managing Director, “As part of our industry leadership, we are excited to release this substantial additional enhancement. From the outset, we have worked closely with industry and leading experts to make it easier to transform to the Safety Culture without adding any burdensome workload requirements.” Shemwell went on to add, “This new ability dramatically increases operational competence and capacity to manage across the energy ecosystem (including renewables), enhancing Operational Excellence and sustaining the Safety Culture.”

Serge Rueff, Ph.D. creator of the Network of Excellence in Training “NExT,” and “PetroStars”, an integrated Project Management Consortium, as well as past-Director of the Society of Petroleum Engineers (SPE), stated,” Realistic training is vital if Critical Infrastructure sector organizations like energy are to reach and sustain a high-level Safety Culture. Online game-based solutions enhance the learning experience and assure the new knowledge gained is retained. The soft skills learned from this game are not replicated by traditional engineering and management training programs.”
