

Online schools in Japan giving extra lessons and services

Learning at home to shake off the Coronavirus blues

Fukuoka, Mar 12, 2020 (Issuewire.com) - In the wake of the Coronavirus infections and closures of many schools and workplaces around Japan and the world, people are looking for new activities to do at home.

And in Japan, several online service providers are offering extra tutoring to cover for students' missed school classes.

One such provider is the Japanese Online Institute or JOI, which is the pioneering online Japanese language school.

With a 15 year history and over 4000 students enrolled since 2006, the school has weathered much over the years with no sign of slowing.

At a time when people are stuck indoors with limited options, learning a new language or brushing up on your Japanese speaking skills could be a good use of free time.

JOI's unique FlexLessons are 50-minute small-group lessons from professional, government-certified Japanese teachers.

And now instead of 3 Trial Lessons, they are offering a special campaign of 4 Trial FlexLessons for their same affordable price of US$9 or 900 yen for a limited time.

Students can freely combine 20 types of live Japanese lessons including conversation, grammar, listening, Kanji and vocabulary lessons to fit a variety of learning goals.

Their schedule provides over 130 classes a week from a selection of teachers.
And the school also provides JLPT preparation courses as well as business

So if you are stuck at home, one way to make new friends, learn Japanese and shake off those Coronavirus blues with JOI's Japanese lessons
