

b2b-aero.com (formerly OneAero-MRO) announces the roll out of MyAero.Net

In light of the Covid-19 Pandemic, b2b-aero.com (formerly OneAero-MRO) announces the roll out of MyAero.Net to support the commercial aviation industry.

Delray Beach, Apr 20, 2020 (Issuewire.com) - b2b-aero.com announced today the introduction of www.myaero.net, the aviation industry's first VIRTUAL BUSINESS TO BUSINESS NETWORKING SERVICE application featuring CHAT ROOMS to create new business relationships and connect to existing ones!

This is in response to the NEW need for a remote global aviation business to business communication networking platform for the aviation industry during these challenging times. b2b-aero.com's 20-year-old network currently has over 40,000 aviation users, 35,000 aviation companies in 150 countries including OEM's, Airlines, MRO's, Repair Stations and Suppliers.

Users can connect with any other user on the network. They can locate via search, by name, company or any other information such as department or job description. Users can accept or decline contact. More importantly, users can create their own contact groups and the open subject has driven chat rooms. All rooms are confidential and users have a MyWall that shows all the users' website activity on b2b-aero.com including RFQ's for parts sales departments and repair quotes, etc...

"With the cancellation of flights and revenue losses, the airlines will need a way to reduce their costs, locate parts and supplies for maintenance in the short term performing early "C" and "D" checks on parked aircraft in anticipation of travel activity returning after the peak and decline of the virus. The virtual chatrooms can be used for advanced repair notifications and sharing parts conditions and requirements reducing repair turnaround times and costs according to Michael Harms, CEO of b2b-aero.com".

Cancellation and postponement of aviation trade shows and aviation networking events in the industry have us facing new challenges. b2b-aero.com is stepping up to support remote networking and business development. If you are a b2b-aero.com user, you already have access to MyAero.Net. For everybody else, there is no cost access. They can go register at <https://www.myaero.net/>

About b2b-aero.com- Since 2000 b2b-aero.com is the only provider of online tools and services for the aviation industry, exclusively focused on Maintenance, Repair, and Overhaul (MRO) market. Our e-business and data communication (EDI) services allow us to offer a low-cost electronic interaction and efficient connectivity between MRO customers and suppliers, regardless of their existing IT infrastructure or IT system capabilities.
