

The Artistic Virtues of Four Musicians in the New EP 'Do It for Me' is a Cultural Module of Appreciation

Four musicians of variant tastes came together in formulating the EP, 'Do It for Me', a diverse, creative and cultural tribute to music's collective evolution.

Los Angeles, Apr 3, 2020 (Issuewire.com) - A true creative encounter of quadrants coming together to put a record that justifies the journey of music through the ages of cultural, social, and political changes is already garnering a handsome fan base. The newly released and remixed Extended Play, 'Do It for Me' is the creative brainchild of musicians Knobreaks, RIP Kenny, Slowform, and Munchii providing abstract and captivating bass drops to Sam Shoemaker's musical venture by the same name. The song is originally an unlikely concoction of lyrical rap placed intermittently alongside the intensity of modern-day dubstep ditties.

The original record of 'Do It for Me', a creative collaboration between Sam Shoemaker and Trap Jesus compiles the lyrical intensity of carefree and unapologetic strains with the respite of funny punchlines along its entirety. Produced by the powerhouse music community and contemporary creative community Producer Dojo, this mixed bag EP was able to conserve and recreate bass intricacies for 2020. Each rendition brims with a variety of musical lineage from trap banger and rock-step to deep dub to Riddim. It is as if the musicians have put together content unanimity by deconstructing the song as per their interpretations and the results are glorious.
