Rome and America:
THE GREAT
REPUBLICS

*What the Fall of the Roman Republic
Portends for the United States*

WALTER SIGNORELLI

Pittsburg, May 6, 2020 (Issuewire.com) - Walter Signorelli demonstrates something that will shock many readers: America is a descendant of the Roman Empire. Signorelli examines the similarities of the two greatest political powers in world history – the Roman Republic and the United States. His newly published book Rome and America: The Great Republics: What the Fall of the Roman Republic Portends for the United States is the by-product of his extensive research and insights. He compares their political structures, explains their organic development, and evaluates their political ideologies. Moreover, the author analyzes the parallelism between American and Roman history, their constitutional government, their concept of representative democracy, and the spirit of checks and balances.

“Very interesting and accessible review of Rome's political history and its lessons for the U.S. I'm finding it an easy read and a terrific refresher of the Roman and American history I studied long ago. I like the author's pragmatic, non-ideological approach and focus on the importance of the system of checks and balances for our future. The author's weaving of cultural, social, economic, philosophical and political influences and commonalities between the two republics is fascinating!” shares Carolyn, an Amazon customer.

Walter Signorelli is a professor of law and police science at John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York City. He is a criminal defense attorney and an expert on police practices and procedures. Before he graduated from the Columbia University Police Management Institute, Signorelli attained a cum laude degree from St. John's University School of Law. Notably, he has written three books related to law and police science: The Crisis of Police Liability Lawsuits (2006), Criminal Law, Procedure, and Evidence (2011), and The Constable Has Blundered (2012), which received a recommended rating by the Choice Review for Academic Libraries.
