The Winner of the Top Chiropractic Neurologist Award 2020, he is on a mission to change his patients' lives by introducing them to the true meaning of health.

The combination of the doctor's experience and his ability to remain current with the latest procedures and techniques have contributed to the excellent results he gets with a variety of problems, particularly herniated, bulging, and degenerated discs in the neck and lower back. He is certified in both Cox Cervical and Lumbar Distraction, which are chiropractic procedures that require the use of specialized equipment to treat pain in the neck, arm, lower back, and leg caused by disc and joint problems.

In addition to Cox Cervical and Lumbar Distraction, Dr. Schwartz provides VAX-D treatment, a procedure that was invented by a physician, Allan Dyer, MD, and utilized in the United States and Canada. He is one of the most experienced providers of VAX-D in the country, having been personally trained by Dr. Dyer himself.

A 1981 graduate of the New York Chiropractic College, he completed numerous graduate and postgraduate training courses in order to be able to provide his patients with the best possible care. Board-certified in chiropractic and chiropractic neurology, he is one of the few chiropractors in the entire United States who is board-certified in electrodiagnosis. More specifically, he is well trained in performing electromyography and nerve conduction studies, which are utilized to assess the integrity of the spinal and peripheral nerves.

Among the doctor's professional affiliations, he is a member of the Southwest Florida Chiropractic Society, the Florida Chiropractic Association, the New York State Chiropractic Association, the Council on Diagnostic Imaging, the International Chiropractic Pediatric Association, the New York Chiropractic College Alumni Association, the International Board of Electrodiagnosis, and the International Academy of Chiropractic Neurology.

Although chronic spinal problems are a major focus of his practice, Dr. Schwartz is very much involved with health and prevention. He frequently holds workshops on various health-related issues and the prevention of health problems as we age. His philosophy centers on the importance of good bodily function. That being said, he teaches his patients how to live longer and healthier through proper daily exercise, the best nutrition, the importance of a nervous system that functions at 100%, mental reprogramming, and the elimination of chemicals from the immediate environment.

To satisfy his long passion to teach and give back to the community, Dr. Schwartz took on a position as an Adjunct Professor of Anatomy & Physiology at State College of Florida, and as an Adjunct Clinician/Supervisor to the clinic interns at the National University of Health & Sciences. He incorporates healthy lifestyles into his teaching in order to have a good positive influence on the youth as they are becoming young adults.

Chiropractic is a form of alternative medicine that mainly deals with the diagnosis and treatment of mechanical disorders of the musculoskeletal system, especially the spine. A chiropractic neurologist is a specialist in assessing the health of the entire loop connecting the muscles, joints, and nervous system, and in identifying the dysfunction in each part that can lead to problems elsewhere.
