

An Engaging Indie-Pop Progression Constitutes Artist Britton's Song 'do you even miss me at all?'

Upcoming artist Britton is creating transience of emotions and feeling through indie/pop infusions in her newly released single, 'do you even miss me at all?'

Sylvania, Dec 31, 1969 (IssueWire.com) - The creative mellifluousness of a soundscape infused by indie and pop characteristics always emerges as a beautiful course of musical purposes. Upcoming artist Britton is outing together a soundscape that plunges into the depths of thematic and emotional storytelling. She recently came out with the single, 'do you even miss me at all?' that beautifully coordinates the virtues of contemporary independent and pop music into a dreamy experience. The song is a laid-back track of melancholic stretches that are adorned by the artist's vocal modulations. She assembles the elements of creative indulgence in her song that collectively paves the way for artistic eccentricity.

The song 'do you even miss me at all?' is transgressive and soft in its demeanor but also exemplifies emotional standpoints through its lyrical construction. The 22-year-old artist has paved the way for softcore verses in the scope of her music and come out with flying colors and extensive acknowledgment from the audience. Although working independently, she looks forward to expanding her soundscape and touch the hearts of millions through her thematic depictions of relatable sagas.

Some other songs that constitute Britton's tranquil bit insightful soundscape are 'better lonely', 'rewind', 'R U OK', and 'Damaged'. As she looks forward to building her dream through the expressions of music and art, she is gradually reaching the epitome of artistic freedom through her unique and reflective style. Her themes are known and experienced by her audience and it cuts through like a reality check. Follow her work on Spotify for more musical abstraction.
