Phillipsburg, Jul 5, 2020 (IssueWire.com) - Gregg Paladina is the superintendent of the Phillipsburg - Osceola school district and that is a difficult responsibility in times like these. Because of the unprecedented and unpredictable spread of Covid-19, educational institutions have been facing the challenge of continuing their classes consistently. Students can't come in but their curriculum needs to be finished. Therefore, times like these need a kind of leadership that can guide people through all the difficulties that are yet to come too.

In the past, issues like proliferating money issues have been a concern. Curriculum needed changes and the management of the schools, in general, was all over the place. When Gregg Paladina stepped in as the superintendent, he made sure that these issues were first handled. When the root cause of a problem is dealt with properly, other issues just float away. This is very similar to the current scenario. Students and parents are struggling with a consistent school routine that can be implemented at home, teachers are grappling with learning about technologies they haven't had to use before, and lastly, the school principals have to schedule and plan things in a manner that keeps everyone happy and satisfied! Clearly, all of these are hard tasks that cannot be taken lightly. The downside of this whole situation is not knowing when it'll end either, so only strong leadership can carry people through these hard times.

During these tough times, YMCA has been a lot of help to Gregg Paladina and his team. Their infrastructure and an already well-built network have been quite beneficial to children from all different kinds of families. Collaborations like these are what make a community not only survive but succeed while the pandemic rolls on. Leaders and institutions like these have always had to overcome the countless challenges faced by the school district. So even though this particular situation is unique, the way of handling a hard job in a cool and calm manner stays the same.

Here are some actions that are being taken by Gregg Paladina, the superintendent of the Phillipsburg - Osceola school district:

1. Coordinate with the staff, professors, students, and their families to make sure they all coordinate with each other and run a tight ship.
2. Handle logistical issues that come up every day thanks to people having to do things that are out of their comfort zone.
3. All the schools in the district work like a well-oiled machine so that they can all rely on each other whenever and however needed.

None of these had to be done all at once, at such a big scale, ever before. Handling this mammoth task can be intimidating for anyone, but Gregg Paladina has managed to comply and adapt with the times. It hasn't been easy and will continue to not be but, appropriate measures need to be taken to ensure everyone in the Phillipsburg - Osceola school district comes out of this together.

Summary -

Gregg Paladina, as the superintendent of the Phillipsburg - Osceola school district has been handling the current situation with competence and grace. Gregg Paladina and everyone working with him has been very proactive about the whole situation and continue to work to the best of their capabilities.
