“...perhaps the only true cynics are those like me who are converted from romanticism.”—excerpt, Huntsman.

HUNTSMAN

novel

by

M.A. Cumiskey

Bideford, Jul 9, 2020 (IssueWire.com) - Michael Cumiskey's Huntsman centers on Paul, a writer taking respite in an isolated location called the Mount, after attending her mother's funeral. The book starts with Paul's memories as a socially inept child and his troubles adapting to the complexity prevalent in society. The distortions of his childhood play an important role in his decisions as the story progresses. The story starts to unfold at a faster pace as Paul gets associated with the small community living in the Mount while also bewildered and fascinated by their beliefs and behaviors.

On the outside, Huntsman may look simple with its minimalistic cover. However, the narrative instigates self-examination. The story brings us back to our past as Paul revisits his and makes us wonder of all that is unknown.

"Cumiskey is a writer of inestimable talent. He moves his yarn along at a pleasant pace and frequently supplies insightful perception with articulate precision... Cumiskey's history of one man's struggle with his conscience, his principles, his beliefs, and his behavior, along with the incidences that arise from that battle, make not only for involving intellectual stimulation but also for a whole lot of fun. This is an erudite tale told exceptionally well. It is a pleasure to read and will likely be long remembered by those who do," notes Joe Kilgore of The US Review of Books.
