

Overcoming Coronavirus Setbacks: A Collaborative Approach - Comment Piece by Fortel CEO Sat Nijjer

West Midlands, Aug 13, 2020 (Issuewire.com) - The reaction of the UK business community to the Coronavirus pandemic has been heartening to see, with collaboration and communication more important than ever.

As a business, we believe that collaboration is a major factor in providing value to clients, creating positive solutions to problems and ensuring you stay ahead of the game.

We pride ourselves on collaborating with clients to achieve the best results possible, while increasing transparency and trust.

Sat Nijjer Fortel CEO said, “we have seen businesses across all sectors collaborate for the greater good. This period has been immensely difficult but some of these collaborations have created relationships that will continue to blossom for years to come”

As we all work together to try and move past the lockdown period into something more sustainable for businesses, this will continue to be key.

Across infrastructure, businesses have responded collaboratively and with great agility.

United by evolving Construction Leadership Council guidance, the sector has maintained operations and played a key part in shoring-up the economy. We are in a more settled state of routine and control.

There is no doubt that collaborative thinking has influenced this and should continue going forward.

Our sector is an agile one; we can design, model and integrate solutions remotely and we can manufacture off-site.

We can educate people around the controls and processes that will keep them safe. We can be there for them when they wobble.

Being forced apart has driven a spirit of collaboration that might have been missing in introverted business development.

Suddenly, we all face the same challenges.

Collaboration and agility are the most powerful tools we have to ensure we respond considerably, impactfully and together. This is surely the solution.
