

Da Switcher is just getting started.

New Jersey's Own Da Switcher is beginning to climb the charts.

Newark, Oct 22, 2020 (Issuewire.com) - Born FuQuan Scales, October 1, 1987, HipHop artist Da Switcher has always been a hustler. Raised by a single mother in Hoodaville, Newark, Nj: Da Switcher has spent most of his life in and out of prison since he was 12 years old. As he states in his song “Whippi n’ that White,” he was just loving the streets. “All I ever looked up to was d-boys and gangsters,” says Da Switcher.

No matter how much of a ‘Superman’ mentality Scales might have had; he would soon find out he was still human in 2011. After being attacked and beaten with a bat, Scales would find himself with amnesia for a month and a face that had to be reconstructed it left with a metal plate in his frontal lobe for the rest of his life.

Over the next 5 years, Da Switcher would find his ambitions and reason to live. After all, he’d lost everything in October of 2014 to an electrical fire; a prison record; a metal plate in his head; and lost, the passion to do music for about a year. However, even from behind bars Da Switcher earned completed his Multi-Media class at Essex County College. He also managed to work himself up into a halfway house, where he was able to obtain employment, and save up enough to money to build his own studio off his commissary. Creating works such as “#FREESMOKE” and “Da Kill Switch.”

Finding himself back behind bars for shooting a music video in 2018, Da Switcher never gave up and made it back into another halfway house. Giving another opportunity, Da Switcher has dedicated himself to being an inspiring role model to the youth of today with his new release “Off the Bench.”

Never looking back Da Switcher is on his way to the top and there will be nothing holding to hold him back!
