Bitcoin mixers or bitcoin tumbler disguise the cash flow of BTCs and helps users to protect the privacy of assets. Bitcoins have revolutionized transaction functionality as one of the leading cryptocurrencies and is rendered as anonymous in its concept and ideas. But in reality, this anonymity is not or only to a limited extent guaranteed in the usual use of BTC. Transactions are always stored in the Blockchain which is publicly visible. If someone assigns the address of a Bitcoin Wallet to a specific person or company, tracing of the transaction and the amounts involved becomes available to everyone. This is comparable to a bank account where every transactional detail can be traced. This drawback of Bitcoin or BTC has been challenged and fixed by a Bitcoin mixer.

Such services are known as mixers, tumblers, or bitcoin blender where Bitcoins paid in by several agencies are transferred anonymously to the wallet addresses specified by the payers. For example, Max sends 10 BTC to the Bitcoin mixer, Paul 15 BTC, and Anna 3 Bitcoin. The amounts are split into small amounts and mixed with each other and with all other users of the Bitcoin mixing service. The origins of Max, Anna, and Paul's Bitcoins are thus no longer traceable, and they can easily withdraw their coins to a bank account without anyone being able to trace it back.

Statistical analysis by some well-known companies reveals that approximately 8% of all the mixed bitcoins come from illegal sources. Using or implementing a Bitcoin tumbler service is not illegal and is used with the aim to protect user wallets from falling prey to criminal and hacker activities.
