Let us first understand the situations under which Amazon Reimbursement can be due to the seller: -

- If any of the units that you sell gets lost and misplaced in the Amazon inventory after you have shipped the product, Amazon owes you reimbursement
- If any of the products you have sent to the Amazon inventory gets damaged within the Amazon Warehouse or Amazon FC after complete completion of the required inward process, Amazon owes you the refund.
- Amazon reimbursement may be due if the money has already been refunded but the product has yet not reached the warehouse

- At times Amazon can overcharge or wrongly charge for the warehouse products
- If the inventory gets lost or missing from the Amazon FC then it is usually considered as the mistake of the Amazon logistics service responsible for the in-transit inventory management. Reimbursement could be due in such cases.
