

The Strains of Distinct Genres Finds a Blended Course in Band Children of Indigo's Soundscape

Upcoming multi-genre band Children of Indigo presents a beautiful canvas of limitless musical and thematic purposes with their distinct soundscape and style.

Dallas, Nov 12, 2020 (Issuewire.com) - Multi-genre collective Children of Indigo creates a soulful and eclectic palate of various blended flavors in their soundscape. A soundscape that can be defined as a confluence between vintage tunes and contemporary sounds, the band procreates beautiful energy of rock, blues, hip-hop, and punk. This band has delivered a mixed array of musical and artistic symbiosis that is bringing about a revolution in rock in the current times. Their songs 'Tomorrow Ain't Promised' and 'Wake Up' from the album, Native Alien present exquisite musical transformations, and dynamics that the band puts together through a groovy and musically conscious atmosphere.

Hailing from Dallas, the band is currently associated with Umbrella Records that helped them take their music to their audience. Their inclination towards hip hop's lyrical and rhythmic engagement is evident in the song 'Devil's Basement' and 'Free Soul' from the albums Gum on the Wall and Cosmic Brethren respectively. The thematic and lyrical content of their songs provokes thoughts and contemplation through the captivating stages of rock, blues, and psychedelic formatting. Originally started as a home studio project by Jo and Jay Indigo, the collective later expanded with new line-ups.

The band Children of Indigo draws inspiration from a wide range of artists from Black Sabbath to Wu-Tang Clan that deduced their soundscape into such a diverse and extensive space. Their other songs like 'When the Times Comes', 'Dancing in the Dark', 'Death Door', and 'Nothin Child' all portray their creative expanse. For the year 2020, they are looking forward to releasing five albums and accomplish their creative goals. Stay updated to their new releases on Spotify, Instagram, YouTube, and Facebook.
