Real estate agent George Schechter is busier than ever these days and states that “more people are looking for clean homes with flexible floor plans and many amenities to keep the entire family active and happy throughout the day”. Many are seeking to be in a quiet neighborhood with easy access to the necessary stores, only a few minutes from the ocean and most importantly, they do not have to leave the house much because everything is under one roof. A tremendous amount of agents with his company are preparing contracts and closing deals on virtual tours with out-of-state families. Although it is not a new way of practice, it is becoming more prevalent every week as this pandemic continues.

Although researchers are moving closer to an easily produced vaccine and ready to be dispensed, many are still wary about the effects and understanding behind this newfound research. More families are being conservative and thinking of a “long haul” lifestyle of spending more time at home than out in the general public. Only time will tell as we continue to press forward as to what the future holds.
