He starred on Bravo's singing competition show "The Kandi Factory," winning the grand prize: a song penned by Grammy-winning artist Kandi Burruss entitled "I Can Do Anything." Cory is also an exceptional songwriter in his own right. His original songs are in high demand. The country group The Highway Women recorded his song "The Devil" in 2018.

Cory performs both acoustically and with his full band. He captivates his audiences no matter the venue or event. His single "Blind in Love" (the first of a six-song series) was released on July 20, 2018, to worldwide critical acclaim. His second song, "Everybody Sing," produced in Memphis by Wes Edmonds (Wyclef Jean Production Team), came out on December 7, 2018. His next single, "Girl," arrived on April 13, 2019. That year, Cory split his time participating in the pre-production of several shows in New York and New Jersey and writing and recording new music.

Cory began his career in 2005 as a musical theater performer. Through 2013, he celebrated many accomplishments, including a 2011 NJ Perry Award Nomination for his role in Seussical The Musical (The Mayor) and a 2013 Broadway World nomination for Best Vocalist for his role in Joe DiPietro's "The Last Romance" at the Bickford Theater. Cory re-entered the theater world in 2019 in the roles of Young Buddy in Westfield Community Players' "Follies" in May 2019 and Matt Volpe in the award-winning original musical "They Call it Gravy, We Call it Sauce" with Music Jar Productions in October 2019 at the Bound Brook Theater.

In 2020, during the COVID-19 pandemic, Cory took to TikTok and decided to share his journey with autism. He has become an influencer and an advocate for children, families, and adults who are on the spectrum. He has used his platform to promote positivity by inspiring others with his unique brand of levity. Cory has coined the phrase "People with Autism Have Superpowers and #letsnormalizeautism."
