order of service design is available, without the hefty price tag. In eye-opening news, Funeral Order of Service recently announced, after the overwhelmingly positive feedback and success of offering free Bespoke Design service for a number of months, that they have decided to continue this over the months and years to come. This service not only saves families money but also removes the stress and headaches often associated with trying to create a Funeral Order of Service on automated platforms.

"I've over 25 years in the printing and design industry, and its common practice to send bereaved families into online design tools, I wanted to offer something better, less hassle that would give the loved ones something more personal," commented Tim Thompson, owner of the company. "I'm confident that based on the feedback of families that used us, we're on the right track, this latest development in the process is just another step on the road to delivering a superior service to families across the UK."

According to Thompson, the six-step process that Funeral Order of Service uses is quick, simple, and helps make sure families have a premium quality order of service. step sequence, once a family has booked an order online.

First, the family selects a base style, then they make some choices about how their photos should be displayed (like the type of frames for example) and the style of fonts they like most. Next, the family chooses from a selection of floral elements, choosing flowers that had particular meaning or they can suggest items that aren't listed and we source those for the family. Next, any hobbies or interests that were of interest, the family shares these, and they are incorporated into the final design.

All-in-all, the whole process is quite easy for the family, there are no template systems to navigate, no online design tools to be saddled with, or other headaches.

Funeral Order of Service then send proofs within three hours to be approved before printing. The company is always happy to go over these with the family until they are satisfied and happy with the final design. Printing and shipping happen either the same day or the next day, depending on the time everything is completed.

Feedback for these services has been incredibly positive.

Rachel W., recently said in a five-star review, "Beautiful order of service delivered quickly and found the process easy. We were able to include multiple photos and given lots of opportunities to edit and change the text. Fully recommended!"
