West bengal, kolkata, Mar 4, 2021 (Issuewire.com) - An infographic resume is the most advanced resume format that looks attractive and catches the hiring manager's attention easily. It is still a lesser-known resume format because most people believe that a Resume must be a text-based document. Indeed, the Text Resume is widely used and accepted by all the companies and recruiters, but an Infographic Resume is replacing Text Resumes in some field.

Imagine, you are a recruiter and there is a pile of resumes on your table, and you have to shortlist only a few of them! Most recruiters just take a glance at each resume and roughly sorts some of them. The sorting process starts with the resume format and structure. Most of the resumes get rejected due to improper format, insufficient white space, dull colors, and even the fonts used. In this human verification process, some well-qualified candidates also lose their chance due to a poorly-designed resume.

There are mainly three types of resume format: Text Resume, Visual Resume, and Infographic Resume. To know the difference between these, please read Text Resume vs Visual Resume vs Infographic Resume.

Why Infographic Resumes?

A resume must be well-formatted and must contain the proper information. Infographic resumes are recognized to visualize information in an effective way that catches human attention. In this format, some information is presented through graphs, charts, or visuals that can be easily read. These days, recruiters don't have much time to read every resume. If a resume looks attractive to them, they pay some extra attention. This is the trick used for the infographic resume. Generally, infographic resumes are colorful, that is one of the reasons that make them stand out from other resumes.

Who Creates Infographic Resumes?

Today, some resume service providers started making infographic resumes. There, you can choose between some pre-built infographics and shuffle them into your resume. But, a proper infographic resume is not something like that. A graphic designer, who has experience in resume designing, can make it properly. Remember, the goal is to make it easier for a recruiter to go through the resume and understand the information. So, it is strongly advised to get an infographic resume from a qualified designer. You can also check one of the best infographic resume builders, 'Mycvdesigner'. They write and design every resume from scratch and maintains industry standards.

Can I Use Infographic Resume?

If you are a highly experienced professional or a graphic designer or working in a creative role, the answer is YES! Infographic resumes suit creative profiles well. Suppose, you are a graphic designer and applying for the same role, you can use an infographic resume to introduce your creativity and talent. Similarly, if you are a salesperson and achieved many positive things throughout your career, you can display them through infographics. Highly experienced people can also use infographic resumes as they have many accomplishments to show graphically.

If you don't belong to any of the above-mentioned professions, you can still use an infographic resume. Take expert opinion before making an infographic resume.
