California, Los Angeles, May 10, 2021 (Issuewire.com) - The vast canvas of the desert, genre-defying soundscapes, and cinematic vignettes inspire Mojave Grey's barrier-breaking mood during our unprecedented times. Based in between Los Angeles and the Joshua Tree, Mojave Grey is the brainchild of recording artist Zander Bleck.

Flow means so much to me. I found myself holding on to so many ideas, people, things in my life and wanting things to remain the same. But that comes from fear and everything that's good is on the other side of fear. I wrote flow to myself talking about that. In this new project Mojave Grey I don't "belt" my voice loudly as I have in the past and focus more on soft articulation This song introduces that back as a way of conveying my emotion in the lyrics. I love singing it.

Mojave Grey commented: " Flow sets the tone for what's to come. I feel a little spark in Mojave and people throughout the high desert and Southern California are starting to be more and more aware of this "desert rock" sound we are creating. So excited for what's to come ".

"It's a new sound, "Desert Rock" moody, pulsating, guitar and vocals." Zander called upon longtime musical collaborator and producer Matthew Chiarelli, whom the duo shared much success in the 2018 Single "Mercy Me," along with artist Michael Pozzi to join on this new crusade.

The trio is embracing the new normal with atmospheric compositions, an aggressive release schedule, short film visuals, and immersive live performances in nature. "We seek to capture the vibe of the desert and elements of nature and to infuse into our music and visuals for to those who yearn to escape during this socially distant moment," Zander said.
