

Alan Longo: High School Dropout To Music Prodigy

New Jersey, Howell, Jun 1, 2021 (Issuewire.com) - Growing up, life was fairly troublesome for the young Alan Longo. The high school days were dragging and Longo's mind was only in one place- music. With a passion for singing, songwriting, and production, he knew his purpose was waiting just outside of the classroom. After dropping out of high school at the age of 16, Longo hit the ground running with internships at Phase One Studios and Chung King in Manhattan, New York. Later that year, his journey came full circle when he attended RRFC school to receive his GED and certification in audio engineering.

In the years that followed, Alan Longo grew into notoriety as an independent standout artist. With countless hit singles acquiring millions of streams only by way of self-promotion, major artists, athletes, and influencers started to take notice of his raw talent and drive. He gained support from the likes of Steven Olesky, Kristie Mewis, Jake Paul, Alexa Costell, and Dennis Rodman- to name just a few. Now known for his No. 1 smash single ROXANNE, Longo also showcased his skillset as the touring DJ for Arizona Zervas at the start of his career.

In 2019, Alan Longo signed his first single deal with The Orchard (Sony Red). Continuing his streak of dropping hit after hit, it appears there is no end in sight for Longo's success and the sky's the limit for the New Jersey artist. As of 2021, we hear he has big plans for the near future and the best is yet to come.
