Play Therapy:

Playing is the natural habit through which children express their feelings. Play therapy helps students to solve their problems, control emotion, be more conscious about their safety, and many more. In-play therapy, to make the children express themselves and also to control the feelings in their world the therapist creates a surrounding (i.e. playing) in which makes children feel most comfortable. Play therapy is one of the ways to spent time with the children which helps to honors the individual identity of their development level and it is one of the ways to help by using the unique language that means "play". To develop Communication, self-respect, responsibility, empowerment, and recovery from problems toys are specially used in the playroom.

The best approach to care for children:

Children have not yet developed to show off them by vocabulary and verbally, so there is a lot of chance to express their thoughts and problems. Counseling for children is entirely different from adult counseling. In Adult counseling they come, simply sit and talk but in children's counseling, they have their special language of playing. Through child therapy, we can understand the needs of the child and communicate that to the caretaker. We can also solve the issues using this treatment method.

Play therapy is the best mental health approach according to the association of play therapy irrespective of age, gender. If parents involve in the treatment process then it will definitely be the best treatment. Kid Talk actively involves parents in the treatment process.
