

Teacher and Artist Anne Yap is Changing the Meaning of Art and Craft into a Strong Bond with Her Children

United Kingdom, London, Jun 7, 2021 (IssueWire.com) - Anne Yap is a mother, writer, teacher, and pianist who shares a keen interest in making various crafts and artworks. She teaches kids art and craft at home, a passion that started when she first started working.

Anne Yap's tryst with crafts started when she discovered it is an effective stress-buster. Her inspirations are not constricted to any particular style; rather she imbibes her taste and aesthetics from various craft websites and books like Martha Stewart and of course, her children. Her inspiration for art comes from the various paint and art classes that she has joined over the years that enabled her to express her inner mind through her creativity.

Anne Yap herself is a true inspiration to children as she motivates them to make art from the simplest of resources. Crafting can be made fun with a few household supplies and children can create meaningful cards, balloon bouquets, or their own newspaper. Some of the artwork that she has done include landscapes, like the beach on a beautiful summer's day where one can see the different types of blue paint collide into one another. Doing art and craft with her children also makes their relationship into a stronger one. Reach her via the email below to know more.
