

Coverking - Ferrari Purosangue SUV Spied Covered in Blue Tape and Camo

Anaheim, California Mar 1, 2022 (Issuewire.com) - While we've already seen a few spy shots and videos of the Ferrari Purosangue SUV in road testing, this latest video gives us a better idea about how close the car is to being launched. The camouflaged car rounds a corner with a black fabric wrap on the outside covered with blue tape on the inside and out. We can only imagine that this is because Ferrari wants to let us know that this test vehicle is almost ready for production.

This Purosangue covered in blue tape and camo could be one of the last times in history that a super SUV is driven around with blue painter's tape holding on a black camo wrap, which makes this a historic moment for SUVs around the world.

The new super SUV will make its debut later this year, we're sure many people are eager to see the finished product—a luxury SUV with a Ferrari badge that's meant to compete with other high-end SUVs from the likes of Lamborghini, Bentley, and Bugatti.

The Ferrari Purosangue will be much lower than its competition and have a more wagon-like appearance than a traditional SUV. The lower center of gravity and improved aero will result in better performance than other super SUVs.

Ferrari has yet to confirm any specs on the Purosangue, but rumors suggest that it will come in both V12 and V8 guises. Even though we haven't seen the car in person, it's already causing a stir among car enthusiasts. But Ferrari went to great lengths to hide their latest prototype under black cover and camo.
