Learning Ecosystems to Enable Sustainable Work

Gi Group India Continues “Conversations on Sustainable Work”

New Delhi, Delhi Feb 7, 2022 (Issuewire.com) - “Learn something new for sustainable work – longevity of career” — it’s something everyone is aware of but is perhaps not always followed. It is citied that employees have a difficult time engaging in learning because there are extensive work schedules and deliverables. From deadlines and meetings to time spent with families and friends, there doesn’t seem to be enough time to add in upskilling or learning, which can enhance the individual’s availability to work.

India has the largest working age population in the world. To that extent for the 10 million young people who enter the workforce every year, the challenge of employment is as much as a challenge of employability. At the same time, for mid- career professionals; upskilling and lifelong learning are critical to ensure competitiveness and career progression. Moreover, as corporates emerge from the COVID-19 crisis and its economic impacts, the benefits seen from well-constructed and well-implemented upskilling programs will be an important tool in building confidence, agility, and competitive advantage.

According to recent research Companies making significant efforts for upskilling their employees see the most progress on building employee engagement.

As a key global player in the HR space, Gi Group believes that a sustainable ecosystem of employment and skilling is required to ensure social and human development for all sections of society. In order to explore various aspects of Skilling, Upskilling and Lifelong learning, Gi Group India organized a virtual event on “Learning Ecosystems to Enable Sustainable Work” as a part of the Webinar Series “ Conversation on Sustainable Work”

Industry stalwarts made the conversation even more interesting with their insightful thoughts; Eminent speakers, Ms. Renu Bohra, CHRO DB Schenkar, Mr. Ambrose JP CHRO Rasi Seeds, and Sanjeeb Lahiri, CHRO GRP ltd.

Sharing her thoughts, Sonal Arora Country Manager Gi Group India stated “Creating a sustainable ecosystem is the joint responsibility of business and companies, employees and candidates and government institutions. It is something which can not be left only to one section. While govt and societal institutions have their own role to play, Companies and Employees also need to own this.
