About the Author

Acclaimed author Philip E. Barrington is using a pseudonym because there have been several attempts made on his Life. The first was on a chilly grey morning on December 17th in the winter of 2012. In the several months since, in the early morning hours, when fear gets the best of him, and this happens all the time, like clockwork ticking in the back of his mind, wondering if one day, if his life would be taken away from him and if that horrible ticking that keeps haunting him would ever stop! Scared, alone and afraid because his life was in danger, he began writing, but in the summer of 2013, his life changed forever. He woke up in the hospital in agony from being crushed between two cars. Wearing a Philadelphia collar around his neck, steel wrist splints on both wrists, a cast from his right knee down to his toes and confined to a scooter for mobility, he knew then, that his life would never be the same again. At this point, desperate to reveal his story, before the possibility of his untimely demise. Since he didn't have the use of his hands, he began frantically dictating to his computer and this evolved into the foundational platform for his book today, based on true events. "Who Okayed This?!
