They are experiencing strong growth, particularly in rural areas.

The booming vending machine market

For more than 6 years, the market has been outside companies and the automatic distribution of agricultural products is multiplying. Thanks to the installation of these machines, craftsmen and farmers give consumers access to seasonal, fresh, quality products, produced locally and available in self-service without time constraints. For professionals, it is a way to make additional sales outside the opening hours of their store, with the same price level. Even if it still remains a niche market, the trend is progressing. In a town Centre, along a departmental road, in front of supermarkets, or in parking areas near a farm, vending machines are increasingly part of the landscape. These connected machines deliver vegetables, fruit, bread, meat, cheeses, and ready meals... thanks to lockers that can be refrigerated.

Real comfort for the inhabitants who can thus stock up 24 hours a day with local products and avoid excessively long and frequent journeys by car. Many small rural towns are taking advantage of this tool to revive the town Centre, which lacks local food shops. In the form of vending machines or food lockers, supplied by one or more local farmers, it is an opportunity for municipalities to promote short circuits and local consumption but also to provide a local service to inhabitants.
