Before the pandemic's disruption impacted the world, the global economy was already undergoing a persistent slowdown, and the Indian economy was no different. As businesses pressed the reset button in response to the pandemic's large-scale disruptions, all yearly plans, strategies, and standards flew out the window.

However, as the world started recovering from the shock, India Inc rapidly caught up with the pace. Organizations across various domains accelerated their digital transformation to fulfill consumer demands swiftly.

Amid the crisis, several businesses could capture the right sentiment, invest in the right ideas, and pivot more successfully than others. Not only did they propel their company to the next level, but they also drove the recovery of the Indian economy, which aimed to increase the country's digital economy to $85-90 billion by the end of 2020.

To spotlight these real accelerators of the Indian economy, The Economic Times and Statista collaborated to identify visionary entrepreneurs who are scripting the charge at the world's center stage with their remarkable growth story in their edition of India's Growth Champions.
