

Upcoming NFT "BAD Putin" Set to Launch First-Ever Humanitarian NFT Project

San Francisco, California Mar 29, 2022 (Issuewire.com) - A unique collection of NFTs is about to be launched by BAD Putin to support the humanitarian crisis currently being faced by the people of Ukraine. Invaded by the Russian Federation, the people of Ukraine are living in a state of fear and turmoil as their country tries to defend itself from a large-scale invasion. While the military is busy on all fronts, the real victims, like in any war, are the civilians. With millions of people having to leave their homes and countless facing economic crisis, efforts are being made on all fronts to ease their suffering.

BAD Putin is creating a unique opportunity for people to help those in need by creating a collection of 9999 NFTs based on Vladimir Putin's face. The creators have outdone themselves by offering some highly creative NFTs that are both fun to own and can hopefully increase in value with people investing in a humanitarian cause.

Most people buying NFTs these days are doing so entirely for their financial value and the returns they offer. While all of that could still be possible with this collection of NFTs, the group responsible for creating them aims to send 50% of all their minting and royalties' earnings to different charitable organizations involved in social relief work in Ukraine. The primary recipient of these donations would be the Official Cryptocurrency address of Ukraine.

Imagine living in a state of war and fearing for your well-being all the time. That is exactly what the people of Ukraine are feeling right now. While most of us cannot imagine the pain of going through such an experience, it comes as a natural responsibility for fellow human beings to step up and support those in need. It is our responsibility to not sit back and observe as silent spectators and take whatever steps we can to improve the situation for the people of Ukraine.

One reason for choosing this style of NFTs is to create awareness for the people around the world. It is extremely important for people to understand what is happening on the ground and raise their voice in the international communities to ensure a safe and peaceful resolution to the current situation. The BAD Putin NFT project could become a major driving force towards that conclusion with its unique approach and support from people investing in NFTs right now.

Of course, a project like this tends to grow beyond a singular objective and the creators of BAD Putin have vowed to create a community that can continue the humanitarian work post war. Future projects are also expected to stem out from the success of BAD Putin's NFT launch and sale. The success of this venture is obviously dependent entirely on the willingness of people to participate. It is certainly a relief from a humanitarian standpoint to see the support that the project has managed to amass in such a short time.

To maximize the input from potential buyers, the project will allow each transaction to carry as many as 10 NFTs. While the minting cost has yet to be decided, it is worth mentioning that no price can be greater than that of human life and we have seen eagerness from potential buyers to accept costs readily.

Of course, when you compare the costs to the fact that the war has already created more than seven million refugees, it is easy to see how little it matters when compared to the bigger picture. According to the experts, the image that this war has had is so big that it could quickly turn into the largest humanitarian crisis that Europe has ever faced since the 90s!

The figures quoted by UNHCR, the refugee division of the United Nations, amount to a massive 10 million+ by now! According to them, the seven million figure is only for internally displaced persons (IDPs). The people who have already moved to neighboring countries also amount to nearly four million. Of course, we cannot overlook the loss of lives and injuries caused to civilians, with nearly a thousand civilians dead and close to 1500 injured.

It is devastating to see how the Russian forces have decided to attack densely populated civilian areas after facing defeat on several fronts from the Ukrainian military and volunteer fighters from home and abroad. The impact of COVID-19 can also not be ignored as only 36% of Ukraine's population is currently vaccinated. The impact of this war has also put tremendous strain on the country's healthcare system, especially with the Russian air force targeting hospitals.

By providing support directly to the Ukraine government, BAD Putin is a great initiative for support. The creators of the project have worked day and night to bring this project to life in the shortest possible time. That alone is a feat worth praising, yet the platform aims to make it worth your while. With plans for giveaways, NFT surprises, and multiple special announcements planned in the coming days and months, it could easily be a viral platform with substantial growth from an investment perspective.

Being a humanitarian project, BAD Putin is also avoiding any stealth launches and will make its collection available to the public directly on launch date. The project is expected to launch by the end of April and is going to be available on the OpenSea marketplace. The purchasing process is also shown on the project's official website (<https://badputin.io>) along with other useful information. To keep potential buyers and interested parties informed, the creators have also set up a Twitter account and a Discord channel.

The crisis in Ukraine could happen anywhere in the world and displaying a sense of humanity to those affected is vital right now. Participating in the sale of BAD Putin NFTs, or any other charitable effort for that matter, will play a critical role in making the men, women, and children of Ukraine feel like their suffering is felt by everyone and that they are not left alone.
