The collection was inspired by the Cinderella story. Finding that "special person", the magic of falling in love, and finally taking that walk down the aisle is one of the most memorable moments in life. With all those images of romance filling her spirit, Nathalie set about to make her bride embrace the magic of love on her life-changing day. But the groom was not forgotten and she will also reveal her men's tuxedo line.

About Nathalie

Nathalie Loma was born in 1987 in the beautiful country of Cameroon. Sadly, two months after her birth, Nathalie's father passed away. The sudden passing of her father created financial hardships for Nathalie and her mother. To make ends meet, Nathalie's mother taught herself to sew and became a seamstress and dressmaker specializing in African fabric and special event clothing.

Nathalie grew up watching her mother making beautiful clothes for others while providing for her family. She watched and learned from her mother and fell in love with fashion. As she stated in one of her interviews, "I remember seeing my Mom look at fabric and ask it what it wanted; it was as if she knew the garment would speak back to her. This is something I have cherished and incorporated in my work as a designer". Nathalie makes it quite clear that she is an African woman who designs for a global market, "I am proud to be in America, a country that has embraced me and fostered my development, but I also want other young men and women to dream big and never give up".
