The Teen shark plans to re-imagine the power of networking using the 3C concept of Connect, Collaborate & Create.

Appalla Saikiran, Founder and CEO of SCOPE, said, "It started with me and my laptop battling to create a modern-day process that allows people with limited resources and high caliber to connect with investors and venture capitalists to give their entrepreneurial journey a push. The core problem is: that all the stakeholders of the startup domain are scattered. People with correct resources can often combine all components and transform their ideas into reality, but those with limited opportunities and no support or guidance are left behind. With SCOPE, we built a platform where entrepreneurs, investors, and industry experts can all collaborate on a single table and give rise to an innovative and all-inclusive world.”

He further added, “The biggest USP of our service-providing platform is that we understand where entrepreneurs are coming from. We recognize their commitment, resource crunch, and high-risk appetite. Therefore, we ensure a complete value for money proposition, enabling users to only pay for the results they get post opting for a service (No results, No pay). We envision making SCOPE the single-largest platform accelerating the accessibility of opportunities in the global startup ecosystem. We’ve revamped the networking quotient on the back of advanced technology, and we hope to continue impacting lives in the future.”

The Teen Shark is being supported by some of the most prominent and Influential Investors and Entrepreneurs from silicon valley who are looking forward to seeing SCOPE being the one and only stop shop for all your necessities in the start-up ecosystem.
