Before you check the different types of caregivers providing senior home care in Ottawa, you would need to consider the duration you want the caregiver for and the logistics of the care. In case you are looking for a break while taking care of a loved one, you can choose respite care.

Most seniors are more comfortable living in their own homes as it is convenient, close to their friends and neighbors, and familiar. So, if your loved one insists on staying put rather than moving to a home, it is best to hire full-time senior care providers. The care providers will stay with your loved one and this will give you peace of mind.

You can choose between medical and non-medical caregivers. Medical caregivers are usually registered nurses and CNAs. They have the necessary skills and training to provide specialized care for seniors who need medical assistance. On the other hand, companion caregivers have limited knowledge about providing medical help to their wards and function as companions, who provide support and comfort to their clients. They will be able to give medication to your loved ones, ensure they are well-groomed, and take them out for shopping, walks, and doctor's appointments. Some caregivers also do light housekeeping tasks and cooking.

These are the caregiving options that you have. Depending on the option you choose and the tasks you expect the caregiver to provide, the rate will vary.

Here are a few things that you should look for when searching for a private caregiver for an elderly loved one.

Personality:

uCare allows you to filter your search. While you can look at the experience and interests of the professional, do not neglect personality. The caregiver you choose should have a personality that allows them to gel and mix with the senior and other family members. It is advisable to meet the select person once to determine whether their personality suits you and your loved one.

Experience:

If you are looking for someone to provide a senior with Alzheimer's or dementia care, make sure that they have experience in this field. It could be hands-on experience or certification. This will give you peace of mind knowing that the caregiver will be able to assist with medications and daily activities. An experienced caregiver will be able to anticipate the needs of your loved one and provide the necessary services.

References:

Since you will be getting a private caregiver to live with your elderly loved one, it is advisable to ask for references. Make sure you call up the references and ask them if they were happy and satisfied with the services provided. Also, ensure you find out how long the caregiver stayed with them. You want a professional who is reliable and willing to take care of your loved one for the long term.

Create a Contract:

Get the caregiver to sign a binding contract. Make sure that the contract lists the details that you have discussed with the caregiver so that there is no scope for misunderstanding later on. The contract should cover the following, according to uCareNet:

- Duties of the caregiver (make it itemized)

- Scheduled hours
- Privileges they can enjoy in the house
- Meal access
- Compensation (hourly or salary), including possible hikes and bonuses based on scheduled reviews
- Days off and vacation time
- Transport usage – public transport or private vehicle for doctor's appointments, running errands, and outings
- Confidentiality clause so that the caregiver does not share personal information of the senior with an outside party

Make sure that you list all the responsibilities of the caregiver in the contract and make them understand as well as read the contract so that they cannot deny anything later on. Using uCareNet enables you to cut out the middleman and directly hire home caregivers, making it extremely cost-effective.
