

San Francisco Inventor Presents “SNUGZIE” Facial Tissue, So You Will Never Run Out – Ever Again

San Francisco, California Aug 13, 2022 (IssueWire.com) - "I suddenly ran out of Kleenex*, yet no warning, no alert, just an empty box. The last facial tissue looks exactly like the first one you pull out of the box. I thought there should be a convenient way to know when you're about to run out of Kleenex, so you don't have to make that obligatory tissue run to Wally World," said Richard H. Davis, a prolific inventor and entrepreneur from San Francisco, California, "so I invented SNUGZIE facial tissues," said Davis. People are stockpiling boxes of Kleenex, and hoarding rolls of toilet paper products, sparking panic buying, the cause of many of the out-of-stock situations, according to Bloomberg News. Davis is a self-proclaimed "serial inventor" and thinks the world is now ready for a box of facial tissues that automatically alerts you when you run low.

SNUGZIE facial tissue works by giving you 100 white 2-ply tissues and then the last 28 2-ply tissues are colored either pink or baby blue as a warning to restock your private stash when you pull a warning tissue. This innovation would be easy for tissue paper companies to license from the inventor and feature in their Juggernaut brands such as Kleenex, Puffs, Scotties, and various other private label store brands.

The patent-pending invention provides a colorful way to indicate if you are running low on facial tissue. In doing so, it eliminates the need to use an unsanitary handkerchief. As a result, it is conducive to maintaining health and preventing disease, especially by being hygienic and it helps to avoid family disruptions. The invention features a reliable and accurate design that is easy to use so it is ideal for cold and flu season. Additionally, it is producible in different design variations. SNUGZIE is so soft it's like tickling your nose with a feather.
