A startup company has created an online booking platform that allows users to find exciting spaces exclusively for content creation and short stays.

The idea for the platform came on the back of the recent boom in the popularity of adult content creators. Popular adult content site OnlyFans now has 170 million registered users and over 1.5 million content creators actively producing content for people throughout the world. The new platform is aimed at both these content creators and YouTubers, who make a living from creating unique, and engaging content. OnlyRooms, connects hosts anywhere in the world, that have unique or exciting spaces, with the millions of content creators that are looking for new locations and ways to keep their content interesting and fresh.

OnlyRooms believe in transparency above all else. With numerous examples of individuals being banned from popular house-sharing platforms for creating content, without the host's approval or awareness, OnlyRooms is seeking to fill this gap by providing a platform where Hosts and Guests can agree and hire venues for film, photography and content creation without the awkward conversations and secrecy.

With the recent popularity of Netflix's smash hit "How to build a sex room" the once-secret sex dungeon is becoming more mainstream. But what if you don't have the space or money to build one? OnlyRooms is seeking all types of venues including dungeons, that will be made available for guests to rent hourly, daily or even nightly. They encourage Host's to think outside the box when it comes to what may be used for a content creation space. Maybe it's a dungeon, garden, boat, plane, kitchen or even a staircase. It seems that imagination is the only limit.

What about those who aren't content creators? This isn't a problem, as OnlyRooms is also looking for houses and accommodation in every city for short stays and vacations. Why not have a kinky vacation in a far-off destination, or even see what is available in your own city?

With the guests now streaming into the platform, OnlyRooms has announced it is now accepting listings from Hosts, so if you have an interesting space or house, you can now rent it out to guests. They are searching for spaces in every country and city to fulfil the needs of the thirsty content creators looking to make something interesting and unique.
