New York City, New York Sep 21, 2022 (IssueWire.com) - The efforts of Chilean men and women to fight climate change will hit the big screen at the most important annual sustainability event in New York. On September 22nd, Imagen de Chile will present the screening of “I am the Earth. Stories from the end of the world” as part of Climate Week and the Global Citizen Festival 2022. This annual event brings together international leaders from business, government, and civil society to discuss and present initiatives on climate change. It takes place between September 19 and 25.

“We’re so proud that the efforts of Chileans against climate change will be seen on one of the most important stages for sustainability in the world,” stated Constanza Cea, CEO of Imagen de Chile. “This documentary has an international focus; it looks to connect with audiences at an emotional level, showcasing talent in a geographical setting that allows them to make a significant contribution,” she added.

The screening will be held in collaboration with the International Festival of Social Innovation (fiiS) and Global Citizen, for an audience made up of decision-makers, opinion leaders, representatives from the public and private sphere, academia, and civil society, and key journalists covering sustainability and cinema.

“We’re very happy to be able to work in collaboration with Imagen de Chile and Global Citizen on this joint effort,” said Jonathan Herzfeld, co-founder and executive director of fiiS. “It fills us with pride to present these stories that show the best of our country and our people, and allows us to share stories about how our country is working for a sustainable world every day,” he added.

After the screening of the documentary, there will be a panel discussion on climate action and Chile’s contributions to fighting climate change, with the participation of Chile’s Minister of Environment, Maisa Rojas; the environmental activist and founder of “Tremendas”, Julieta Martinez; as well as the vice president of Global Citizen in charge of the relationship with brands and countries, Nicola Ivezaj.

Over 46 minutes, the film takes the viewer on a journey to discover different initiatives and cases where Chileans are contributing to mitigating the effects of climate change, from large-scale projects and scientific innovations to day-to-day citizen actions, all of which are collectively necessary. The focus of this documentary is to show how Chile is contributing to an issue that affects all of humanity, such as climate change, in five thematic areas: sustainable agriculture; forest and biodiversity conservation; renewable energy; the water crisis; and astronomy.

The featurette film was directed by renowned director Maite Alberdi, who was nominated for an Oscar in 2021. She worked alongside unit directors María Paz González, Sebastián Fernández, and Santiago Correa. It was produced by Fábula, the production company that won the Oscar for Best Foreign Language Film in 2018 for “A Fantastic Woman”.
