- Helmets

Helmets, often constructed out of robust and high-quality materials, are an additional piece of protective gear that is both vital and significant. The primary function of this item is to prevent head injuries to the players. The wicketkeepers and batsmen wear helmets to protect their heads from potential harm. These days, players' helmets are constructed from materials of the highest possible quality to protect their lives.

- Gloves

Gloves are necessary equipment that is always included in any of the Cricket Stores in Los Angeles or other areas. The batsman and the wicketkeeper wear it throughout the game. The kit comes with not one but two different varieties of gloves. In cricket, the gloves worn by the wicketkeeper are more significant, while the gloves used by batsmen are smaller and more delicate.

- Shoes

In addition, spiked shoes, which prevent players from sliding about, may be found among sporting items. As a result, they can improve their performance on the ground, which covers certain leg sections, always the possibility of something going wrong. Therefore, players need to use the necessary protective gear to reduce the risk of sustaining life-threatening injuries while participating in the game. These days, players protect themselves from harm and play a safe game by wearing various protective gear, including chest guards, shin guards, abdominal guards, and thigh pads.

- Batting Pads

Batting pads are an essential component of when you are going to buy a cricket kit from any of the Cricket Stores in Los Angeles. A cricket gear will often come with a set of batting pads already attached. During the batting phase of a cricket game, the batsman uses the batting pads (as the name suggests). When you bat, you should focus on protecting the area of your leg that extends mainly from the knee to the ankle using these pads. On the other hand, it does cover a portion of your leg, including the area above your knee on the thigh.

When purchasing cricket gear, it is essential to determine whether or not the pads are a suitable fit for you. A fast method for determining whether or not the pads are the appropriate size is to grasp one of the pads and place it on your ankle as if you were going to wear it. While doing this, you should ensure that your knee is positioned on the pads in the middle of the knee roll.

- Thigh Pads

As its name indicates, a thigh pad is worn around the front of the wearer's thighs. It is another piece of equipment that is very necessary. The batting pads will protect a part of your legs, but the thigh pad will protect the area of your legs that the batting pads will not cover.

You may have noticed that only one thigh pad is included in the cricket gear, although there are two batting pads in the set. It is because a thigh pad is only worn on the front leg, which is the leg facing the bowler and is most likely struck by the ball. Therefore, in most cases, the thigh of your supporting leg will provide enough protection.

Some players choose not to use thigh pads while at the plate. The primary reason is that when one wears it, one may experience pain due to the item's excessive motions. However, if a batsman wears a thigh pad inside his pants, it may easily limit its position and give both comfort and protection.

- Abdominal Guard

In a Youth cricket kit, an abdominal guard is one of the essential pieces of protective gear that a player may have. Refers to it as an abdominal protector, protective cup, abdominal box, or other names. These are just some of the most prevalent ones.

Even though it is relatively small compared to the other accessories in your kit, it is essential to protect a cricket player's abdomen. It plays a significant role in this regard. A catastrophic and sometimes deadly injury may result from a hard cricket ball penetrating the belly area and landing there.
