China is a culturally diverse country; thus, they celebrate many festivals yearly. Festivals in China are based on different traditions and themes.

- The National Day of China is celebrated on October 1st to commemorate the country's founding. This holiday is known as 'Golden Week' because many people have time off from work or school.
- Chinese New Year is the most important festival in China. It is typically celebrated in late January or early February and lasts 15 days. Families get together to enjoy feasts, give gifts, and decorate their homes with red lanterns and scrolls that contain good wishes for the coming year.
- The Hungry Ghost Festival is held in mid-August to appease the spirits of deceased ancestors who are said to visit Earth during this time. Offerings of food and gifts are made to them, and operas or other performances are often held in public places to entertain them.

There are many different types of holidays and festivals celebrated in East Asian countries. Each one has its meaning and purpose based on the culture and traditions of the region. By understanding these celebrations, others can gain a deeper appreciation for the beauty of East Asian cultures.
