Australia

With continuous advancements in technology, regulation changes, and specialization, it's become crucial to gain extra skills and knowledge to get yourself updated. And a CPD course is the best way to do that. CPD, i.e. continuous professional development, is a process of gaining knowledge and learning in the building and construction industry. The other benefit of CPD courses is that they help to increase skill level, credibility, and understanding of the building and construction industry.

In addition to offering better learning opportunities, CPD points also play an essential role in builders' license renewal. According to the Home Building Act 1989, builders must earn 12 CPD points yearly to renew their builder's license. Currently, these CPD points are optional in all regions of Australia, but it is mandatory in NSW and Tasmania for all residential and pool builders.
