

An Indulgence In Classical Music Skillfully Disguised By Modern Ringtones

The common ear's solution for a dearth of exposure to classical music in contemporary media

London, United Kingdom Jan 30, 2023 (Issuewire.com) - The scarcity of classical music in contemporary media has catalyzed its obscurity to the common ear. Modern listeners and streamers of music find themselves inundated by networks promoting myriads of newfangled musicians, putting the classical ones in a defeated contest of cultural popularity. Mainstream radio stations simply aren't going to broadcast the "hottest" concertos from the Baroque Era to their listeners. One could nearly seek refuge in the distinctive mini-harmonies contained in cellular ringtones or default alarm-clocks for the sustenance obtained by a healthy consumption of antediluvian harmony; however, even these such tunes are not inspired by some of the most enriching musical textures of classical music. An even worse solution would be to assign the song with your greatest emotional tie as your notifier every time someone contacts you. Jermaine Washington's solution to the overall shortage of mainstream classical music-nourishment is his creation of ringtones inspired by polyphonic musical forms; Washington has his ringtones for sale as downloadable multimedia files that include the sheet music behind the tune, making his music a possible revival of classical music's popularity.
